For my AI generative image of Mr. Pea, I had to scour the internet on my iPad to find a good one that was actually free. I found one on the iOS App Store called "AI Chat," which allowed me to generate one free image. I asked for a Mr. Pea character, and it churned out the image that is used in my game. If I'm being sincere, I was a little disappointed with the results, but beggars can't be choosers in getting free pictures. I would have likely had more success if I went with Adobe or Canvas instead, but here I am with what I think might be spyware on my iPad now.

Overall, AI generative images can be fun, such as meme-making. I love the security cam footage memes that have been popping around that contain anywhere from men being arrested for wearing large boots to wizards messing up the back of house at a Domino's. However, for a project like this, I'd instead just draw the pea myself so that my artistic vision is protected and I at least have a product I want.
